Leadership and Life Skills
Course Overview

The What I Wish I Knew at 18 Leadership and Life Skills Course is an innovative and engaging program based on the practical life wisdom contained in What I Wish I Knew at 18: Life Lessons for the Road Ahead. Developed to reflect the dynamics of classroom or small group instruction, this nine- (or 18-) week course engages students by integrating relevant subject matter into an enriching and empowering format.

As students consider key “success pointers” with their peers, they will experience powerful outcomes and learn to harness the qualities and methods of honorable leaders. Through a strategic combination of personal assessments and exercises as well as interactive discussions, collaboration, and role-playing, they will learn how to apply positive leadership attributes to everyday life situations.

The What I Wish I Knew at 18 Leadership and Life Skills Course is comprised of nine multi-session chapters that fit perfectly into either a nine-week (quarter) or 18-week (semester) time frame. The chapters do not need to be presented in the order given, and can be easily adapted to any length of course as needed.

Why a Leadership and Life Skills Course?
Acknowledging the Challenge

In today’s globally competitive world, too many young people are not fully prepared for the challenges of adulthood. The reasons are varied and complex:

- Cultural, familial, and economic shifts in our society have created a void in leadership and life skills training
- Educational institutions do not always offer life skills courses for various reasons
- Parents and educators often assume the other is covering essential life topics (e.g., finance)
- Students are facing a lack of employment opportunities to gain real world experience
The end result is that leadership and life skills development is falling through the cracks and our young people are paying the price. The ramifications are felt on both an individual and socioeconomic basis. The U.S. Secretary of Education, Arne Duncan, summarizes it well:

“...preparing young people for success in life is not just a moral obligation of society but also an economic imperative.”

Working toward a Solution

Two elements are necessary to address this growing life skills deficit. One is a comprehensive vision for honorable leadership that inspires and empowers students toward lives of purpose and impact. Second is need for effective and practical guidance in the key decision arenas of life. The leadership and life skills course based on What I Wish I Knew at 18 can help schools and organizations be on the cutting edge of closing this gap by:

- Achieving their missions of preparing students to succeed as independent adults and make wise decisions
- Developing productive people who will lead with integrity in the various settings of life

“As a university president, I have the privilege of working with some of the brightest, most amazing young people. Although all of the students who come to Whitworth are academically talented, what often separates those who perform very well from those who seem to struggle during their first years away from home is the understanding of basic life skills. What Dennis Trittin does in his book, What I Wish I Knew At 18, is to provide a very accessible and clear account of the important things that young adults ought to be thinking about as they enter adulthood. I wish that I had this great resource when I was 18 and headed off to college, and I am confident that students who spend time considering these topics will be best prepared for a life of independence.”
